The Mr Symingtons and Mr Blenkinsops had not been able to open the TARDIS door, so now they were going to try something different. Nadia did not hear them talk much, because they seemed to know each other's thoughts.

"We should . . ." said one.

"Yes, possibly," said another.

"Bring it, then," said a third, "and we'll . . ."

". . . break the doors," finished a fourth.

A Mr Symington brought something into the basement and put it carefully on the TARDIS door.

It looked like a small, glass half-bubble. In the centre of the bubble, a dial was moving, and numbers were counting down.

"Stand back!" said a Mr Blenkinsop, and all the Mr Symingtons and Mr Blenkinsops covered their ears with their hands. Suddenly, Nadia realized that the half-bubble was a bomb.
